CAREERS NEED PLANNING

Boys and girls of high school . age should plan to get lots of education if they plan to be gainfully employed in the future, according to Leland Cade, district Extension agent. Of ten occupational groupings that include all workers in the country, all require greater training now to be competitive than 15 years ago. This is the conclusion of a recent study completed in 1962.

The' study confirmed other studies that boys and girls in rural areas are less acquainted with career opportunity and career planning than boys and girls living in towns. Likewise parents in rural areas were less aware of the urgent need for training beyond high school for their children, Cade continued.

Career exploration must in-clude social development. The study indicates a real need for developing in rural youth a greater self confidence, a posi-tive attitude toward learning,

Our cook for September was born in a land that most of us have never heard of.

Kristina Tallman comes from the Faroe Islands, a small group that lies inmihe North Atlantic, between Iceland and Scotland.

Iceland and Scotland. How she came from such a remote spot to Chugiak is not an unusual story. After studying nursing and graduating as a registered nurse at her ho e island, she answered as call for nurses at neighboring iseland. This was early in years of World War II, While working there at a hospital, she met an Am-Dican seaman, Leon Tallman, then is the Merchant Marine. They were married, and in 1945 Kristina came to the United States. They lived for a short time in Boston Mass, and ben moved to New Hampshire where all four of their children were born.

all four of their children were born. In 1958, Leon applied for a job with the FAA in Anchorage Alaska. The family lived in Anchorage for one year and then moved to Eklutna, where Leon was the station manager until last June, when he was trans-f rred again to the Anchorage area, nd the family bought a home on Mt.

Eklutha Drive in Peters Creek. Kristina is very skilled in needle-work, and spends much of her time knitting beautiful ski sweaters which she sells. She is presently devoting all of her time toward finishing a beautiful embroidered damask table cloth which she plans to enter in the Fair at Palmer this week.

Another of her talents is oil painting and the walls of her home are adorned with Alaskan scenes that she has painted.

Kristina keeps packed in a suit-case the traditional costume of the Paroe Islanders. This is worn on their holidays, ans she hopes to be able to put it on shen the Scandavian groups of the Anchorage Area celerate their holidays next spring. The colorful garments are all handmade and very beautiful.

The recipies which Kristina will share with us this month come from cockbooks that written iu either Dan-ish, or in the native language of Iceland or in the original Fareo Island language, and must be painstakingly translated, with the measurements i grams converted to our familiar taps or teaspoons. For this she uses a special kitchen scale she brought with her from Iceland.

The oldest of the Tallman children, Chester, age 17 has spent the last sum-mer in the Faroe Islands visiting with his mothers people. He has had an ex-

Emulsion Paints For

Exterior Use Many manufacturers are making emulsion paints for exterior use on wood. These paints are often called latex, rubber-base, water-thinned, or water-base paints.

They are made by combining the pigments with resin particles which have been dispersed in water. The most common are the acrylic-resin and vinyl resin types.

Being water thinned, emulsion paints may be applied on a damp surface, and the brushes and equipment are easily cleaned. Emulsion paints are fast drying which reduces the time in which small insects can entangle themselves in the soft-paint, and also shortens the time between succeeding coats. They brush on easily, hold their color well, and are resistant to moisture blisters. (next col)

The common disadvantages also apply to application. Three coats are necessary when repainting weathered oil-base paint. The first coat required is an oil-base primer. This primer is followed by two topcoats of emulsion paint.

The oil-base primer is required because the emulsion paints make a poor bond with old chalky paint surfaces. If an oil-base paint emulsified in water is used, it is necessary to remove the old paint chalk by brushing, dusting and washing.

For most satisfactory results three coats are necessary when painting new wood. It is desirable to use a high grade oilbase primer on the new wood, and then apply two topcoats of emulsion paint. However, emulsion topcoat can be applied directly over weathered emulsion paint.

To-insure success with emulsion paint, follow the manufacturers directions. They will generally recommend an oilbase primer on new wood or when repainting weathered oilbase paint.

Tell it to Martha

BY: MARTHA COUNCIL

Dear Martha,

We just returned from our vac-ation, and I have never had a more miserable time in my life.

Two years ago my husbands brother and his wife wrote and told us that they were coming to Alaska to visit us. We went out of our way to make them feel welcome, we loaned them our car to drive around, took time off our jobs to be with them

Last month we went to New York City to see the Worlds Fair, When we arrived at the airport, we called them and told them we were there. The first thing they said was to apologize for the fact that their apartment was too small to have us be their They then gave us the guests. names of several hotels that we might stay at.

When we finally checked in at a hotel we called them ag-ain and told them where we were. We didn't hear from them until a week later when they dropped in and had a few cocktail with us (brought up by room service and at our expense.)

They asked how we were enjoyin the Fair, and that they really must have us up to dinner some

That was the last we ever saw of them. We rode in taxles, buses and subways and with out hotel bill it cost us a fortune.

Now Martha, don't your think that after we had gone out of our way to be good hosts to them when they were here, they treated us terribly. I can tell you one thing, the next time any free-loading friends come to Alaska, they can look out for themselves.

UnFairly Treated

Dear UnFairly Treated, I can understant your being upset at the ungracious way these people acted after having been you guest. However, you were foolish to let it spoil your whole vacation.

I don't blame you if you never ask these people to be your guests again, but don't make all your friends pay for their bad manners. Most people are no that bad and are only too happy to return your hospitality.

Sincerely, Martha Council

BULLETIN TELLS OF GAME CARE

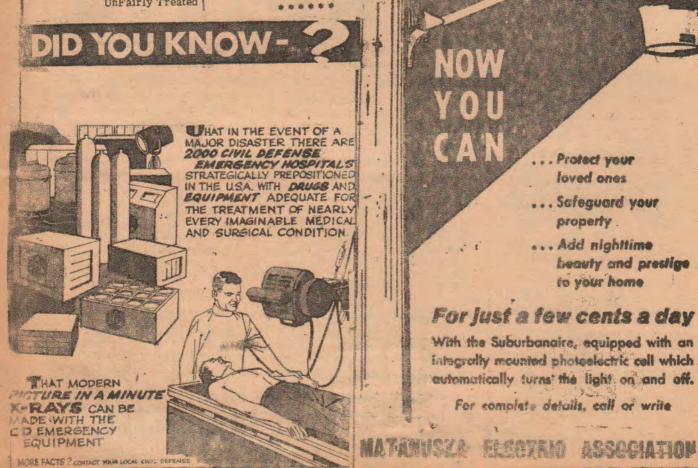

PAI.MER: Going hunting? If so, pick up a copy of "The Hunter Re-turns From The Kill" at your Cooperative Extension Service office.

This bulletin will help you use the game you kill. Many people dislike game meat. Usually, this is because of a bad experience with it.

More often than not any bad flavor in moose or caribou is due to poor handling by the hunter. "The Hunter Returns" ex plains how to clean and care for big and small game so it will be usable when you get it home. It explains several ways to preserve meat, as well cutting and wrapping proas cedures.

Copies are available for 25c" at the Extension Office or the Extension Information Office, University of Alaska, College.
