TEACHERS BACK SAFE FROM HUNT

BIRCHWOOD: Two Chugiak High School teachers are back safely after almost a week of being trapped by bad weather with their downed airplane.

Dennis Harms, pilot, told the Knik Arm Courier that they had left for a moose hunt to the area approximately 20 miles Northwest of Skwentna. He said that he left on Saturday, November 11th, and after landing he laid out a strip in the snow and placedhis snowshoes at the ends for markers. He said that they had completed their hunt and were on the way back when trouble began. They had been in the air no longer than five minutes when they encountered severe icing conditions. He

OPINIONS DIFFER ON ENFORCEMENT FORUM

BIRCHWOOD: Public opinion was varied following a law enforcement forum held at Chugiak High School last Thursday under the sponsorship of the Birchwood Community Club.

What appeared to be an increase in juvenile crime and vandalism in the Greater Chugiak Area within past years led the Birchwood group form a study group, which in turn arranged for the public forum to learn the reason for this, and what under present laws could be done to correct this.

A panel of experts, consisting of Trooper Gilbert W. Hagen of the Alaska State Troopers, William Cunningham, Probation Officer, and James A. Hansen, District Judge

ANCHORAGE: With a green light from the voters, the Anchorage Borough School District has begun preparation for the 1968-69 school construction program, which includes a proposed new high school for the Greater Chuglak Area.

The Buildings and Finance Division's green light came on in October when the $6 million school bonding authorization requested by the School Board received overwhelming acceptance by Greater Anchorage Area Borough property owners eligible to vote.

The authorization enable the school system to move ahead with plans for selection of architects for the various school construction projects proposed by Superintendent Carlisle H. Kramer and his staff.

In addition to the Chugiak Area

In addition to the Chugiak Area High School, a junior high school for the residential area southeast of Anchorage and a number of elementary schools and classroom additions are planned.

Architects from the Anchorage area, other parts of Alaska and from outside Alaska are currently vying for designation as architects for one or more of the projects listed above.

The School Board is expected to complete it's review of the candidates in early December and to make appropriate selections at that time. The Borough Assembly then will e asked to ratifythe selection.

Dr. Kramer, Associate Superintendent Don E. Fridley, Administrative Assistant William Klingler and Building Engineer William O'Neill met with architects interested in school design work November 2 to discuss the method to e used in the selection of architects for the various projects.

(Pilots cont page 1 col 1) said that ice was forming on the wings of the plane and he knew that he had to land immediately. There was no time to return to his original point of take-off, so the plane down in an area of rolling hills. He said that al-though the plane was not damaged in the emergency landing, there was over four feet of soft snow in the area. He told of being un-able to see through the ice en-crusted windshield and having to land while looking out the side window.

He sald it was snowing quite hard at the time, and continued to snow on Sunday. He and his passenger John James, spent most of that day digging the plane out.

On Monday, a C.A.P. plane flew over, and Harms was able to make radio contact with the aircraft. He asked that their families be notified that they were okay, and asked that a pair of snowshoed be dropped, since he had left his at his original strip.

The following day, when bad weather kept the CAP plane from returning, Harms fought his way through the deep snow to some spruce trees, where he cut spruce bought and made a crude pair of snowshoes. This took him all day.

With these homemade shoes he

With these homemade shoes he managed to pack out a fair strip approximately 800 feet long. The following day it snowed another two feet, wiping out all of his work.

When the weather cleared on Friday, and a rescue helicopter landed, both men were willing to leave the plane and ride home. Harms said that although they had a tent, the weather was too windy and the snow too deep to set it up, so they spent the nights sitting in so they spent the nights sitting in the plane in their sleeping bags. He said that they had enough rations to have lasted them two weeks.

Re told that at no time were they concerned about anything other than the anxiety they knew their families were experiencing. He said that he will wait until the weather gets cold enough to freeze the soft snow to return and try to fly his airplane out. When he left it, the plane was sitting in approximately six feet of very saft snow.

(Forum cont page 1 col 2) were asked a group of 24 prepared questions by moderator Rev. John Shaffer of the Chugiak Methodist Church. Their answers could then be challenged by any member of a panel of local residents consisting of Emerson Sortore, Chngiak El-ementary School Principal, Darrell Daley, Chugiak High School Teacher, Robert Fleming, President of the Chugiak Lions, Ray Emmons and Garlan Connell, both of the Birch-wood Community Club. Members of the audience were not permitted to address the panel, but could write any questions on slips of paper provided and these were presented to the panel for answers at the end of the regular questioning.

Trooper Hagen, in his opening remarks urged citizens to report all thefts and acts of vandalism, even monor ones. He said that such information may be all the police might need to clear up other incidents under investigation.

One item that was brought out by the session was that most of the seeming lack of enforcement was the direct result of insufficient manpower in both the State Troopers (for every 100 square miles in the Anchorage area there is 1.4 Troopers to cover) and a lack of probation officers, and finally a lack of detention facilities for juveniles in the State.

It was pointed out that in order to provide for more troopers etc, the people must be prepared to pay mores taxes to pay for these mores taxes to pay for these services. It was learned that bepower many of the offenses in rural areas were not followed up at all.

The audience which numbered over 200 persons was made up of many local residents plus at least ten members of the Alaska State Leg-islature who had been invited to atlend the meeting.

A spokesman for the Birchwood Community Club said that he was much heartened by what was learned, and felt that existing laws were adequate to curb the increase of juvenile crime.

Some other members of the audience interviewed at random did not share his optimism. One felt that an open invitation had been extended to problem youth to continue with their activities since ther wasn't enough Troopers to arrest them, or detention homes to keep them in. Another claimed to have spotted several well know hardened juvenile offenders in the audience, "...taking it all in,".

A follow up meeting of the Law Enforcement Study group was held last Tuesday night. There tapes made of the forum were reviewed, and a course of action charted. The chairman of the study committee, Garlan Connell stated that there ap-pear to be 4 distinct areas in which local people can work toward (cont page 6 col 1)
